Find a magnifying glass. Study a snowflake and draw your observations.	Build a snowman and measure his waist with a measuring tape.	Write a letter to yourself from the perspective of a snow man.	Write a nice note to someone that you appreciate.	Build an igloo big enough that you can fit inside.
Pour a cup of hot chocolate with marshmallows. Describe the states of matter. Which is the solid, liquid and gas? Use describing words to tell about each.	Make a snow collage. Use things in nature to make some pictures in the snow. Possible materials may include pinecones, sticks, leaves, pine needles, rocks.	Clean up your room, or another room in your house.	Jump from one spot, as far as you can to another spot. Measure your jump and see if you can beat your best jump.	Write a persuasive letter to your principal about why you think there should be more (or fewer) snow days.
Take a picture of your something you did today and share it with your teacher.	Write a poem or song about snow, or being off of school.	FREE SPACE	Do 20 snow jumping jacks.	Build an inside fort. Get a flashlight and read a book inside.
Do 5 laps around your yard. (This may be hard if the snow is deep!)	Write a journal entry about your day.	Choose one assignment from the past that you could improve and try it again.	Sled down a hill. Be creative and find a new way to increase your speed.	Call or email a friend that you haven't talked to in a long time.
Practice your handwriting by writing some words in the snow.	Record yourself reading a page or two of a book. Listen to it and think about how you could improve your reading fluency.	Bake a sweet treat. Pay attention to the measurements in the recipe so it comes out right!	Read a book for 20 minutes.	Do something nice for someone in your home. A chore, favor, or something else kind.
